

De: Manu Herbstein <manuherb@africaonline.com.gh>

Para: dacostaq@cpovo.net <dacostaq@cpovo.net>

Assunto: FW: Query: Ovonramwen of Benin/Brazil

Data: Quarta-feira, 19 Janeiro, 2000 20:00

Jose Luiz,

I know very little of Nigerian history but I happen to have handy a copy of Sir Alan Burns' imperialist History of Nigeria, first published by Allen & Unwin in 1929. In this I read, on page 174, ". . . Overami the king was deported to Calabar, where he died in 1914." There is no mention of any Brazilian connection. The index has several references to Brazilians, but none to Brazil.

Manu Herbstein

P O Box CT697

Accra

Ghana

Tel +233 21 242003, +233 21 242004 (office) 773978 (home)

Fax +233 21 774283, +233 21 242001

e-mail: manuherb@africaonline.com.gh

-----Original Message-----

From: H-NET List for African History and Culture

[mailto:H-AFRICA@H-NET.MSU.EDU] On Behalf Of Kathryn Green

Sent: 19 January, 2000 6:26 PM

To: H-AFRICA@H-NET.MSU.EDU

Subject: Query: Ovonrramwen of Benin/Brazil

Date: Wed, 19 Jan 2000

From: Jose Luiz Pereira da Costa

<dacostaq@cpovo.net> or <dacosta@myway.com.br>

[Editor's note: This message was transmitted to H-Africa by listmember Ali B. Ali-Dinar <aadinar@ccat.sas.upenn.edu> for Mr. DaCosta. Please post a copy of your response to Mr. DaCosta at the above e-mail address(es). Any responses will be of interest to listmembers, as well.]

I am working in a private research that requires some details about the takeover by the British of Benin Empire, in 1897. I've indeed one intriguing question that I had until now no chance to solve: Ovonrramwen (sometime Ovonramwen) was exiled to where? And how many members of his entourage went along with him?

The Encyclopedia Britannica says:

. . . a full-scale military expedition, which captured Benin City in February 1897. Ovonramwen surrendered to the British in August and died in exile.

Copyright 1994-1999 Encyclopedia Britannica

Since the history of Benin, as the history from many people of Africa, relays in oral tradition, I have an old story:

In the early years of 20th century an African came to live in my city, Porto Alegre, that is the capital city of Rio Grande do Sul State, in Brazil, a gentleman that used to say that he was the Oba of Benin, overthrown by the British. He died here, in Porto Alegre, in May 28th, 1935 at the age of 105 years. He used to say that he came to Brazil in 1899, but before being settled here, he was in others parts of Brazil, as Bahia and Rio de Janeiro.

So, the question is:

Is there any chance that the oba Ovonramwen being this person called here by the Brazilian (Portuguese) name of Custodio Joaquim de Almeida?

His picture is

I will be grateful if you may answer my request, by giving me the exact place to where Ovonrawen was placed in exile.

By the way, another information: The gentleman above used to receive a pension, what was recollected, time to time, at the local branch of Bank of London.